

Christmas

For some, not being where they'd like to be over the Holidays can be a big let down. Although the Christmas of 1977 was different, it certainly wasn't a let down.

On the eve of Christmas Day around 2330 hrs, the mess deck was crowded with watchstanders, and people who were waiting for the midnight movie to start. Some one started singing Silent Night and before you know it the whole place joined in, and that started off our Holiday Season.

Even though we were some 9000 miles away from home, the holidays were still the same, only different.
