

RADARMEN

Acting as the electronic eyes of the ship, the Radarmen control our vessel's Combat Information Center. Gathering information from the radar and radio telephone, properly displaying it, evaluating it and disseminating it to the bridge was the constant task of the CIC watchstanders on Market Time.

Josh Humphreys, who is known from stem to stern as "Mr. Golden Voice," leads the pack among a fine group of communicators who were called upon to coordinate unit maneuvers over as many as half a dozen radio and telephone circuits simultaneously.

Whether working a NGFS mission, coordinating other units for a major operation or scanning the "23" for a target creeping toward the South Vietnamese coastline, the Radarmen introduced INGHAM to all she passed from An Thoi to Da Nang.

FRONT ROW: RD3 M. W. Hoosac, RD3 R. L. Young, RD2 K. W. Engel, SN W. M. Hamrick, BACK ROW: LTJG J. T. Wood, RD2 M. C. Sigler, RD2 R. W. Paitsell, RD3 H. J. Humphreys, RD1 R. R. Thompson, RD3 M. L. Regrut (Not Pictured)

OPERATIONS DEPARTMENT

FRONT ROW: RM3 R. F. Jagers, RM3 R. V. Stottlemeyer, RM3 J. W. MacMillan, RM3 M. E. Charbonneau, SN M. E. Horton, BACK ROW: LTJG M. L. Solberg, RM2 R. C. Morrow, RM1 J. O. Skidmore, RM1 J. R. Pryor, RM1 F. E. Murray, RMCP R. W. Fleming

RADIOMEN

Radio communications is our major source of contact with the outside world while at sea for extended periods. Shrouded in secrecy, top secret, and confidential, the Radiomen's job is a combination of drinking coffee, operating radio transmitters, teletype equipment, sending, receiving and distributing messages, and passing out the mail from home after UNREP or when we arrive in port. Aply led by "Vic Tanny" Solberg and "Flim Flam" Flemming, the RM's serve as INGHAM's communications media often handling 600 messages a day.