

DEEP FREEZE '87 brought on a lot of changes in the ET shop. The "Old Salt" is ET3 Scolaro who after saying over and over again that he was not going south finally completed his first trip. The trip is almost over and you can still hear him saying "I'm not going south." Mr. Geoghagan replaced Mr. Rhoton as our EMO, Division Head. He is often heard saying "What seems to be the problem?" followed by the statement "Well the EO said . . ." The top shop is full of wonders! In charge is chief (what cha' doin') Taylor. Batting 1st is ET1 Wulff who has been seen looking for the ship's loran tower and has learned that some things are too hot to touch. ET2 Bruce (operator error) Norton, ET2 Tim (did you hear that . . . (Larsen and of course TT2 Pat (I have one of those!) Davis make up our 2nd class lineup. Pat is still trying to convince everybody that "I'm not no engineer!" while Bruce is always mumbling something about a "maggie!?" Batting for the 3rds are ET3 Tim (I'm not going south!!) Scolaro and ET3 Joe (The Riddler) Riddle. Tim is still trying to find a larger pistol while Joe's famous quote to chief at 0900 is "Hay chief, I'm taking the rest of the day off!" The bottom shop is controlled by ETCS (The Tweeker) James and ET3 Michael (Dirty Harry) Harrington. ETCS James has been seen sleeping with is "Tweaker" and Mike is still trying to convince the top shop that he is a MK-EM-ET. The EMO is proud of the fact that we did not have nay CASREPS on this trip, "Good Work Men." Oh, by the way, the chief said not to tell the EMO about all the equipment we still can't fix! As the trip comes to an end, we bid farewell and bid good luck to those that are leaving us this inport and also to bid good luck to those that have yet another south trip to endure! Probably
