

godthaab, greenland's capital

Sprawled across a series of hills and down to the water's edge, Godthaab is Greenland's metropolis. Its population is perhaps five thousand, predominately composed of Danes and Eskimos and the result of their proximity. In the small stores there are many evidences of international trade—Kodak film, Norwegian shoes, British clothes. There are also many signs of the primitive. Like those of Kulusuk, the photographs on the next few pages seek to show what this city is like.
