

Because of her fabulous reception on her last visit to Sydney, Westwind returned to this magic city on March 8 for a long awaited three days. Little had changed. People were as friendly as ever and King's Cross as active. Bondi and Manly Beaches provided activity for swimmers and surfers alike.

Sydney-at-night is a source of continual amazement. While other cities become lifeless through the dark hours, Sydney becomes a different world — lights flashing, music flooding the air, and dancing everywhere. It is little wonder that nearly everyone was enchanted by Sydney's magic.

There was a deep emptiness in many stomachs when we left for the long trip across the South Pacific for Hawaii.

Sightseeing and shopping were as common this time as our last stop on the way south. (left) Dill gazes into the window of a sporting goods store. (right) Booker and Maddox select souvenirs to take home with them.

